Tit for Tat.

Good mornin', Miss Kate," said young Mickie Free, "Good mornin', again; it's yourself, sure I see. Looking blooming as iver." But Kate turned away As she said, " Mister Mickie, I wish you good day. You're a heartless desaver-now don't say a word ! Pretty tales about you and that Norah I've heard ! You know you danced with her the day of the fair. And praised her grey eyes and very red hair, You called her an angel; quite in love with her fell; And at night, when you parted, you kissed her as well : Then young Mickie gave a sly wink as he said-"I desayed her, my darlin'-this may turn your head-Yes, faith I desayed her; my darlin', it's true, For I shut both my eyes, Kate, and fancied t'was you!"

Yes: that's what I did: Kate, it's true; I shut both my eyes And fancied 'twas you ! "

Well, I've no time to stay, so good-by, Mickie Free, You may desaye her, but you don't desaye me; I'm not to be blarneyed. Mick, a word in your ear-You had better be off, for my dad, a coming here." "Oh," your dad's comin', is he? That's not him I see Now bobbin' behind that owld blackthorn tree. For it's Paddy Mahou." "Oh," said Kate with a sneer, "You've got your eyes open at last, Mickie, dear, And shure you are right-'tis my own darlin' Pat. So take my advice, Mick, and get out o' that; For he's coming to coort me. Now, listen, my lad. When that boy kisses me, oh! won't you be glad? For when his lips meet mine, why, what will I do But shut both my eyes, Mick, and fancy it's you?

That's what I'll do; Mickie, it's true; Shut both my eyes And fancy it's you !"

Self-Made.

My life began when my coin was spent: I woke one morning without a cent, I had health and strength, but nothing more To keep the wolf away from my door. It was up-hill work for many a day, And nobody helped me-I pushed my way.

It made me bitter at first, I own. When my friends forgot me one by one; It was not my lot to meet or see The brother born for adversity. Now the struggle's past and I'm proud to say That nobody helped me -I pushed my way.

often with nowhere to lay my head, Sometimes in want of my daily bread, Through all my health and courage were spared, I seldom grumbled, never despaired, Though my path was dark and my sky was gray, And nobody helped me-I pushed my way.

I totled and struggled along, you see, And reached the topmost branch of the tree, I climbed alone and alone I stand, Nobody reached me a helping hand. The struggle was hard, it was no child's play, But nobody helped me-I pushed my way

Yes, that is always my proudest boast, The one upon which I dwell the most-Yet I've a wish that I seldom own-It pains me sometimes to stand alone; I would almost rather have it to say That some one who loved me had smoothed my way.
